THE FLICK Amendment is a constant section relates solely to amending the Constitution by a Convention, that language being that "all acts and ordinances" of the Convention shall be submitted to the voters for ratification or rejection, and shall have no validity whatever until they are ratified; and in no event shall they, by any shift or device, be made to have any retrospective operation or effect." The Register claims that the amendment of 1866 was retrospective in its operation and effect, therefore for-bidden by the language quoted, and therefore void; furthermore that it is ex post facto, torbidden by the Constitution of the United States, and for this reason, also, shows, and an examination of the whole section will show more plainly, that the language quoted in regard to the retrospective shift or device refers exclusively to the "acts and ordinances"-say amendments proposed-by a convention, and not to amendments made, as the amendment of 1866 was under the section followlowing that quoted from. If this were not true, it would still be an absurdity to say, as the Register does, that the Amendment of 1866 is void because "expressly forbidden" by the Constitution. It says: "The adoption of such a measure is expressly forbidden by the Constitution tself." Let us analyze this. The object n amending the Constitution is to change it in the particulars wherein the amend ment differs from or conflicts with it. The ted with the language we have quoted, forbidding any retrospective shift or device, of course the latter gives way and the former is the law. But that language has no application to the amendment of 1866. It refers exclusively, as we have said, to the acts and ordinances of a convention, and relates to the time when they be enfranchised, it would mean that the enfranchisement shall not take place till the amendment has been duly ratified and proclaimed; that is, that the amendment hould not make men voters before it was a part of the constitution. This would be just such a "retrospective shift or device" as is here described. Therefore, we say the amendment of 1866 in no wise conflicts with it, though if it did the amendment

The school law makes it the duty of each County Sperintendent to make his Annual Report to this Department "on or before the thirteenth day of September." And yet, though nearly two months have elapsed since that time, and though I have repeatedly urged each County Superintendent to have his report ready in time, still only teachly-sinc out of Aftry-four reports have been received at this office.

Will the delinquent Superintendents send me their reports of the earliest possible time.
